Continuous professional development (CPD) in teaching in higher education is indispensable

Collaboration in professional development in teaching and learning is necessary

5 Arguments

From studying/teaching at one university to mobility

- students
- lecturers

No European professional development framework in teaching and learning in STEM yet, No agreements about mutual recognition of teaching qualification in Europe yet

From working within one culture to inclusivity

- match expectations
- match communication

No European recognized programme offer for CPD how to teach in inclusive way

From general pedagogical training to CPD with focus

- disciplinary
- interdisciplinary

No European offer of professional development activities in teaching and learning that assure fit to local university and faculty needs

From research priority to equality of education and research

Not enough or no time allocated for CPD in teaching

Low status of the achievements in teaching and teaching innovation

No possibilities for (post doc) researchers at industry, research institutes to professionalize in teaching and learning in HE

From traditional lecturers to recognized educators who promote progress in teaching and make change

No European certification in teaching and learning in higher education yet

No micro credentials for HE teaching competence and expertise in teaching and learning in HE yet

Eurolecturer Academy will empower international recognition of university teaching competence and stimulate collaboration in higher education in Europe through

- CPD-Ambassadors, ELA members
- Support of ECTN in cooperation with EuChemS, IUPAC, and EUA
- Support from EU (e.g. Erasmus+ staff exchange grants)
- EU accreditation of certificates for lecturers and CPD-Ambassadors (ASIIN)
